We dispel no matter how that is the story about the traditional Indian ceremony that is held every year in Little Big Horn, Montana. In this ceremony, ten little Indians are killed in a simulated battle, and the survivors are forced to wander into the wilderness. The survivors are then to return to their villages and tell the story of what happened. This ceremony is a way for the survivors to remember the pain and suffering of the past, and to honor the memory of those who lost their lives.
